The Benders Recalled.

Mrs. Willis Willford, a widowed lady of Athens, lost her youngest brother at the hands of the Benders, who figure so prominently in the history of Missouri a few years ago. This young man lived in Kansas, about forty-eight miles from the Benders, and taking with him several hundred dollars in money, he started for the frontiers with the intention of speculating in land. He traveled in a two-horse wagon, and it seems that on the second day he reached the cabin where the Benders ran a hotel and sort of saloon. He was absent so long that his family grew uneasy, and instituted a search for him, but the missing man could not be traced beyond his second day's travel. While the Benders were looked upon as bad characters, nothing criminal was known against them, and the suspicion of foul play at their hands was entertained. It was a year and a half after his disappearance that several travelers stopped at the Benders' house, among them a lady who was bent on sleeping in an upper room with a small window overlooking an orchard. During the night she was aroused by some noise outside, and looking out saw several persons burying an object. The moon gave a pale light, and to her horror she discovered that the parties were interring a human body. She was near enough to hear what they said, and discovered from their conversation that they had just murdered one of their guests, and intended to attend to the body next. She was so frightened, but managed somehow to escape into the woods, and make her way to the nearest settlement, where she told her story. A posse was once organized, and started for the scene of the murder, but the Benders had evidently gotten word of their discovery and only a vacant house was found upon the arrival of the officers. The romantic escape of these criminals is too well known to be related by us. They have never been captured, and doubtless escaped for good, though numerous reports of their capture and death have been published. In searching the house a trap-door was found near the bar counter, which was sprung when a stranger stepped upon it, throwing him into a dark cellar. Here he was knocked in the head by the father, while his daughter would cut the victim's throat with a knife. The body was then buried in the orchard, and the spot plowed over so as to obliterate all signs of a grave. In this orchard was found the bodies of ten grown persons and one child, all with their skulls crushed and throats cut. Mrs. Willford's brother's body was recognized by the color of the hair and garments, although it had been lighted months since he was buried. —Athens (Ga.) Banner.

Decline of the Nose.

Someone has invented a process for the reduction of large noses. The inventor was struck by the fact that noses on which spectacles are worn are, as a rule, small noses. He thereupon formulated the theory that the pressure of the spectacles on the bridge of the nose interferes with the free circulation of blood and that this interference deprives the nose of nourishment and prevents its growth. In accordance with this theory, he now proposes to reduce the size of any given nose by placing a metallic clamp on the bridge. This clamp, it is claimed, will, as he believes, reduce the largest nose to moderate proportions within a reasonable length of time. There are two or three weak points about this alleged invention. One of these is that the theory on which it is founded has no support in fact. Some of our most eminent noses are those on which spectacles are worn, and for a lifetime, and among our smallest noses are some on which spectacles never have rested. That spectacles of one sort and another will reduce the nose generally now than they were fifty years ago, and that noses have undoubtedly grown smaller during the same period, is undoubtedly true, but it does not follow that there is any connection between the two facts. The gradual decline of the human nose is the result of the introduction of European and general use of handkerchiefs. The Romans never used handkerchiefs, and their noses, as we all know, were of the largest and finest type. Moreover, they were less liable to colds and catarrhs of the head than are people of the present time, and their noses enjoyed almost a sinecure. As civilization advanced northward from Italy the inhabitants of the cold and variable climate of northern Europe found that their noses were constantly called into activity, and as a consequence the average European nose fell below the standard. Within modern times the handkerchief was invented, and a new and potent factor in the reduction of noses thus came into existence. Constant friction will wear away the hardest stone, much more the soft and cartilaginous nose. Under the friction of handkerchiefs the noses of the present century have steadily diminished, until small noses are worn almost as much as spectacles. It is a question whether it is desirable over to reduce the size of the nose. Greatness of intellect has in all ages been closely allied to greatness of nose, and the man who, having been gifted by nature with a large nose, should desire to dwarf it, and his intellect at the same time, would deserve no assistance in his foolish purpose. —N. Y. Times.

Getting Down to Hard-pan.

They were talking about hard times and the general disinclination to buy large amounts of money investments, when a bald-headed man, edged into the crowd and said: "Gentlemen, we have been living beyond our means, and we must get down to hard-pan and begin over again." "That may be all very true," replied one of the others, "but who will begin?" "I have already begun," said the bald-head. "I was worth $30,000; I bought $20,000 worth of city lots and started to build a house at $25,000. The result is that I am a right down to bed-rock and ready to begin now. Do any of you happen to know a good opening for a dancing master?" —Wall Street News.

The Better Kind of Gossip.

I say, I hate a malicious gossip. But there is a sort of gossip I like—the innocent, entertaining sort, who talks to me when I care to hear, about people whom his little does not harm, or whose chat is too choice for personal mention, or who refers to persons whom he does not name, in a spirit of criticism not severe enough to condemn, but just enough to prompt you to see for a better yourself by name, and think it no harm to indulge in little-sauce of this impersonal kind occasionally—growing more confidential, but not so confidential as the tale, grows more pointed in application—a fault which suits me to the point and is not offered in any ordinary form, as it is at times a little more confidential.

Salutatory.

With an appreciative remembrance of generous patronage for the years that have past, we would bow ourselves before the public for the privilege of this our Eighteenth Exposition. An efficient police will be in attendance to enforce order and eject all drunken and disorderly persons from the grounds. Should it rain any day of the Fair that day's programme will be passed over and omitted. All entries in the Hall must be made previous to 12 o'clock M., of Wednesday, the second day of the Fair. It shall be the duty of the President to select three or more judges to award premiums. If a judge is objected to by an exhibitor it shall be the duty of the President to make another selection. Positively no appeal from the decision of the Committee. Owners are permitted to exhibit their own stock. No persons but the officers of the Fair, judges and groups of stock will be allowed to go inside of the ring during the exhibition of stock, and no one will be permitted to interfere with the awarding committee. No one shall not on the awarding committee who is related to any person competing for a premium before such committee. No member of any awarding committee shall express his opinion on the merits of any animal, or article before him, but shall write numbers, to which, in his opinion, the premiums and certificates should be awarded and deposit the same in the ballot-box prepared for that purpose. After the ballots shall have been cast the Marshal shall examine them, in the presence of the committee, and announce the result to the Secretary, who the premium and certificate shall be awarded to the article or animal securing the greatest number of votes. In case of a tie an additional judge shall be appointed by the President to the Hall all entries will be free, and no money will be paid.
